PURPOSE

To suggest that the Liaison Section request CIA to furnish the Bureau the original and two copies of all communications directed to this Bureau requesting investigation. Also to request CIA to clearly indicate in their communications that investigation is desired.

#330,299
ALL INFORMATION CONTAINED HEREIN IS UNCLASSIFIED DATE 8-19-97 BY

BACKGROUND

As you know, the Bureau conducts a large number of investigations pursuant to requests received from CIA. In almost every case the outgoing letter to the Field requesting investigation must be forwarded to two Field Offices. This necessitates either photostating the CIA communication or making typed copies, both causing extra work on the part of Bureau personnel. In most all cases, if we had two copies of the incoming communication from CIA, no additional work would be necessary at the Seat of Government in opening an investigation.

In many cases when CIA requests investigation, the request will not be clear. In one instance recently a Cia communication ended in this manner: "This agency would appreciate being informed of any information developed." In this instance CIA desired that we conduct an investigation.

The advantages to be realized in receiving the original and two copies of all communications from CIA may be said to be the following:

1. Eliminate transcription errors.
2. Eliminate photostating or typing extra copies.
3. Speed up the handling of mail at the Bureau and get the investigation initiated much quicker.
4. It will save Supervisory and clerical time

ACTION: It is suggested that the Liaison Section request CIA to forward the original and two copies of communications to the Bureau when they are requesting investigation. It is also suggested that CIA be requested to clearly indicate in their communications when an investigation is desired.

Handled with window, CIA 10/6/50 — CIA will comply.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. TOLSON
MR. LADD
MR. NICHOLS

General Walter Bedell Smith, the new Director of CIA, called and expressed his appreciation for the letter which was written to him upon his new appointment. He also thanked me for the information he had received concerning Horace Sydney Craig and I stated that of course though we could not vouch for the authenticity of this information I did feel he should know about it. The General agreed and asked whether we could do a little quiet surveillance along this line and when I replied that we could he asked that we go ahead on this.

Very truly yours,

At a luncheon meeting on Tuesday, October 17, 1950, you will recall that you indicated to General Smith you would have Agent DeLoach furnish him with a digested summary of the book, "Sexual Behavior in the Human Male", written by Alfred S. Kinsey, a Professor of Zoology at Indiana University.

Pursuant to instructions Agent DeLoach furnished General Smith a copy of the summary in question on October 18, 1950.

Today I saw Admiral Roscoe H. Hillenkoetter, retiring head of CIA. He was accompanied to my office by Mr. DeLoach of our Bureau.

We had a general discussion about the problems with which CIA has been confronted and some of which will have to be faced by General Walter Bedell Smith, successor to Admiral Hillenkoetter.

In accordance with your request a survey has been made of the general files concerning the CIA applicant program and of likely individual investigative files for the purpose of determining whether CIA has been explaining delays in the employment of individuals by advising applicants or persons interested in applicants that the FBI delay in conducting a file search or an applicant investigation was causing the delay in the appointment of an applicant. The results are as follows:

CLASSIFIED BY 8-20-97
DECLASSIFY ON: 25X1

On 8/14/50, [redacted] talked to Assistant to the Director D. M. Ladd and advised that [redacted] was anxious to get a position with CIA and that CIA had advised that the matter had been pending since May and that a security check with the Bureau had not as yet been completed. The Bureau files were checked and no record of any request to investigate [redacted] was located. [redacted] was advised that no request had been received from CIA.

G. I. R. [redacted] of CIA confidentially advised Supervisor Shanklin that this investigation was still being processed by CIA and that this investigation would be requested of the Bureau in the near future for a semi-covert position.

[redacted] b3

On 6/29/50, Judge E. A. Tamm called the Bureau and advised that the above named individual is [redacted] He had applied for a position with CIA and had been told that there would be a long delay probably because of the length of time it would take the FBI to make a security check. Judge Tamm told Judge Holtzoff who furnished him the information that there was never any delay in the FBI investigations and that any delay would be caused by the Agency hiring him.

A check of the Bureau files indicated that this Bureau had never been requested to investigate Smith for CIA. [redacted] of CIA confidentially advised Supervisor Shanklin that this request had never been furnished to his Branch for an investigation.

DECLASSIFIED BY 8-20-97

[redacted] 118-1184)

In early July, 1950, [redacted] called the Director's Office and advised that [redacted] an employee of CIA, was probably coming up for another check in the near future and asked that we be on the lookout for her name. The Bureau completed the investigation of [redacted] on 5/13/47.

RECORDED - 123 62-80750-1370

It was determined from CIA that she is presently employed and that there is no indication that any additional investigation would be requested.

[redacted] (118-6702)

This applicant is [redacted] On February 28, 1950, [redacted] wrote the Director and advised him that [redacted] had applied for a position with CIA and he asked that the investigation be handled promptly. The request for investigation was received from CIA on March 17, 1950, and completed on April 6, 1950. It was noted that this application was signed February 14, 1950. [redacted] was advised that the investigation had been completed and he expressed his appreciation.

[redacted] [(118-3883)] (S)(W)

On May 19, 1949, this Bureau transmitted the completed investigation to CIA on [redacted] The reports contained considerable derogatory information reflecting upon his loyalty. On July 7, 1949, [redacted] wrote this Bureau and stated that he understood this Bureau had investigated him for CIA and he stated he had received a letter from CIA advising that "Due to unforeseen circumstances we cannot consider your appointment with this Agency." [redacted] requested that the Bureau explain CIA's action in refusing him an appointment but made no complaint that CIA had denied him his appointment because of information contained in our reports. We replied to [redacted] of course, advising him that any decision concerning his appointment would be the sole responsibility of CIA. b3

[redacted] [(118-3810)] (S)(W)

On February 15, 1949, [redacted] advised Assistant Director Nichols that the above-named individual had requested that he use his influence in expediting an investigation for CIA being conducted by the Bureau. A check of our files at that time did not reveal any request for an investigation of [redacted] and he was so advised and we have never received a request to investigate him to this date.

[redacted] [(118-5854)] (S)(W)

[redacted] complained to our Charlotte Office that certain information which he had furnished concerning the applicant had come to the applicant's attention although the applicant did not know that [redacted] had furnished the information. [redacted] stated that it would appear from the circumstances that there was a leak either in the FBI or in CIA.

A review of the file reflected that the information furnished by [redacted] had also been furnished by a large number of individuals who had been interviewed during the course of the investigation. It appeared that [redacted] had been closely associated with a girl named [redacted] while they were [redacted] was suspected of being a Communist. Numerous people who were familiar with [redacted] furnished the same information as [redacted] did. CIA was contacted and emphatically denied revealing any information from the FBI reports to [redacted] and further denied that [redacted] had ever been contacted by any representative of CIA after CIA had received the FBI reports.

The Bureau wrote the Charlotte Office and told them to advise [redacted] that the information furnished by him had also been received from several other sources and it was apparent that the applicant was aware of the fact that numerous individuals knew of his close association with [redacted]

[redacted] (118-3552) (S)(W)

The applicant called at the Bureau on May 31, 1949, and complained that as a result of an FBI investigation for CIA he had been discharged by CIA. The FBI reports did not reflect any disloyal information on [redacted] but did reflect that for many years and in many localities he had the reputation of being a brusque, blunt and egotistical person. [redacted] also alleged that during the course of an investigation conducted of him in the Boston area the Agents who conducted the investigation evidenced prejudice against him.

An inquiry was made and [redacted] allegations were found to be without any foundation. Signed statements were taken from the Agents who conducted the investigation in Boston which did not indicate any basis for [redacted] allegations on that score and Admiral Hillenkoetter, the Director of CIA, was personally contacted and categorically denied that [redacted] had been displayed any FBI reports or given any information from them. He stated that he had been dismissed because of inefficiency and incompetency and had been categorically so advised. He also stated that he considers [redacted] to be a chronic liar and completely untrustworthy.

It is to be noted that on the occasion of [redacted] contact with the Bureau the statements which people had made concerning him during the course of the investigation indicating that he was brusque, blunt and egotistical and rude were amply borne out.

[redacted] (118-3578) (S)(W)

The completed investigation of the above named individual, an employee of CIA, was furnished CIA on April 20, 1949. The reports contained derogatory information reflecting upon his loyalty and security.

SECRET

Mr. Ladd

On July 8, 1949, [redacted] contacted Assistant Director L. B. Nichols and advised him in the strictest confidence of information which he had received from [redacted] He stated that [redacted] had told him that he had been investigated by the FBI for CIA and that some official of CIA had stated that certain things had been developed during the investigation which necessitated a recheck or that [redacted] subject himself to a lie detector test. Nothing of a specific nature was told [redacted] by CIA except for the fact that he came from a section of New York where a lot of suspicious people came from [redacted]

b7C

Assistant Director Nichols reviewed the reports furnished CIA and found that all references to the fact that [redacted] had been deleted from the reports prior to their being transmitted to CIA. He so advised [redacted]

No further action was taken concerning this case. This individual later under an assumed name wrote approximately six articles in the New York Post wherein he was very critical of CIA and their personnel policy. None of the articles, however, referred to the FBI.

The following is the text from a recent communication:

Now I have seen everything:

I was asked to see a fellow now in CIA who was introduced as being a good fellow who needed help.

The contact now having been established, the CIA man phoned and asked me to receive one of his agents, [redacted] The bird showed up yesterday; turned out to be a former OSS operative who now, he said, is in charge of European Communist intelligence for Europe. [redacted] bent my ear for slightly less than an hour and a half until I stood up; then he continued for another 20 minutes, with both of us standing.

I can't say that I'm sure what he wanted except possibly to set up an official contact. Most of the time he spent trying to convince me that, unlike other agencies, CIA affords absolute protection to its sources. This is because CIA, if requested, leaves names of its sources out of its reports. This went on and on even after I assured him he could use my name any damned time he pleased but I was sure I had nothing to offer about European Communists. He was undeterred.

b7C

"Any time you pick up a red-hot tip, no matter how wild it might sound, we would appreciate your letting us know," [redacted] said. I suggested maybe I could help steer him to some local groups that might be helpful but he rejected the idea, explaining, "No, we take special care not to spread ourself widely. We want to be sure of the people we deal with."

[redacted] kept reminding me I could pass on anything and be assured of absolute protection; CIA would even refrain from making a follow-up investigation if it would hurt me. That's part of the regulations of his organization, he said. I assured him I had no secret information and said I doubted if I had any information of use to him.

He kept talking about his "account" and referred once to me as his "account." I asked [redacted] just what an "account" is. He explained the term is used to designate any assignment or person he makes contact with.

Being only a 3-year-old agency, he pointed out, CIA naturally hasn't bogged down with red tape, hence it does not have to report names in its cases. Of course, he added, it gives more authenticity to be able to include a name but it isn't necessary. He wouldn't let go of that theme.

As an example, he cited a story on Korea which LIFE purchased three years ago but never used. CIA got a copy from the author and it was invaluable. (It didn't save the Admiral his job, however.) Anyway, he went on to point out that CIA never revealed the name of the author; LIFE never knew about it and no-one was the worse off.

To relieve the monotony, I tossed in an item: namely, that on Monday the UP Bureau in Berlin cabled here for a quick obituary of Gerhardt Eisler and the job landed in my lap. At first he was all ears. Next thing, he started to get mysterious, hinting that he knew about the cable. Finally, he came right out and said he knew all about it on Monday, which, I'd swear, he made up as he went. Incidentally, I'm sure he knew absolutely nothing about my background ~~wn~~ he arrived at the office.

When he noticed my interest beginning to wander, [redacted] started to tell me that he keeps a card index on each and every person he deals with and would I mind answering some questions. The index card, he assured me, never leaves the N. Y. office. "Why," he said, "one of our men even keeps a card on his wife." It's an office rule.

Before he wrenched himself away, [redacted] again asked me to be sure to phone any tips or intelligence that came my way. I asked where I could write him, should the occasion arise. He gave me a post office box number, pointing out that CIA's address is kept a secret. I expressed a little surprise at that. At length, and with a becoming air of mystery, he let me in on the secret: [redacted] A bit boastfully he added that the room number isn't to be found on the lobby directory. Dear Lou,

Now I have seen everything.

On Monday, while I was busy writing for a deadline, [redacted] called the office from "21." He left word for me to phone him back promptly, -- important stuff. I did. A fellow he knew in CIA, one of the top N. Y. men (the name slips me), wanted to get in touch with me [redacted] says. The CIA man, he explained, was a good fellow and he'd vouch for him. He asked me to throw open anything I've got to the guy who had evidently left "21" shortly before.

b3

The contact now having been established, the CIA man phoned Tuesday and asked me to receive one of his agents, a [redacted] The bird showed up yesterday; turned out to be a former OSS operative who now, he said, is in charge of European Communist intelligence for Europe [redacted] bent my ear for slightly less than an hour and a half until I stood up; then he continued for another 20 minutes, with both of us standing.

I can't say that I'm sure what he wanted except possibly to set up an official contact. Most of the time he spent trying to convince me that, unlike other agencies, CIA affords absolute protection to its sources. This is because CIA, if requested, leaves the names of its sources out of its reports. This went on and on even after I assured him he could use my name any damned time he pleased but I was sure I had nothing to offer about European Communists. He was undeterred.

"Any time you pick up a red-hot tip, no matter how wild it might sound, we would appreciate your letting us know," [redacted] said. I suggested maybe I could help steer him to some local groups that might be helpful but he rejected the idea, explaining, "No, we take special care not to spread ourself widely. We want to be sure of the people we deal with."

[redacted] kept reminding me I could pass on anything and be assured of absolute protection; CIA would even refrain from making a follow-up investigation if it would hurt me. That's part of the regulations of his organization, he said. I assured him I had no secret information and said I doubted if I had any information of use to him.

He kept talking about his "account" and referred once to me as his "account." I asked [redacted] just what an "account" is. He explained the term is used to designate any assignment or person he makes contact with.

Being only a 3-year-old agency, he pointed out, CIA naturally hasn't bogged down with red tape, hence it does not have to report names in its cases. Of course, he added, it gives more authenticity to be able to include a name but it ~~wasmixmmmmmmmmmmx~~ isn't necessary. He wouldn't let go of that theme.

As an example, he cited a story on Korea which LIFE purchased three years ago but never used. CIA got a copy from the author and it was invaluable. (It didn't save the Admiral ~~mmmm~~ his job, however.) Anyway, he went on to point out that CIA never revealed the name of the author; LIFE never knew about it and no-one was the worse off.

To relieve the monotony, I ~~mm~~ tossed in an item: namely, that on Monday the UP Bureau in Berlin ~~xxxxx~~ cabled here for a quick obituary of Gerhardt Eisler and the job landed in my lap. At first he was all ears. Next thing, he started to get mysterious, hinting that he knew ~~xxx~~ about the cable. Finally, he came right out and said he knew all about it on Monday, which, I'd swear, he made up as he went. I expressed admiratiom at the fast way CIA works whereupon he got mysterious again, in a triumphant sort of way.

I asked if he knew the FBI people here and he said of course. I casually mentioned Granville and Marchessault. Damn it, Lou, if this guy didn't whip out his notebook and write down their names! (Rest assured, I checked his credentials -- the regulation CIA card -- before talking to him.) I believe he was just playing eager-beaver, wanting to be in on the know. I doubt if G. or M. will ever become his "accounts."

Incidentally, I'm sure he knew absolutely nothing about my background when he arrived at the office.

When he noticed my interest beginning to wander, [redacted] started to tell me that he keeps a card index on each and every person he deals with and would I mind answering some questions. The index card, he assured me, never leaves the N. Y. office. "Why," he said, "one of our men even keeps a card on his wife." It's an office rule.

So I told him when and where I was born, what my education was and a few other irrelevant facts. For a moment I was tempted to give him my criminal spe- ~~mmmmm~~ cialty. Then I decided life was entirely too short to be funny with a CIA man. Besides I'd have to explain what an IWW was.

Before he wrenched himself away [redacted] again asked me to be sure to phone any tips or intelligence that came my way. ~~Im~~ I asked where I could write him, should the occasion arise. He gave me a post office box number, pointing out that CIA's address is kept a secret. I expressed a little surprise at that. At length, and with a becoming air of mystery, he let me in on the secret: [redacted] A ~~kk~~ bit boastfully he added that the room number isn't to be found on the lobby directory. ~~[illegible]~~ (Don't pass that address around too freely.)

[redacted] "Say," [redacted] asked me afterwards, "just what kind of uplift was that dumb bastard trying to sell you, anyway?"

Well, I thought this might interest you. Right out of Club "21".

You will recall granting Admiral Hillenkoetter an appointment at 10:15 A. M. on October 24, 1950. After leaving your office the Admiral confidentially advised Agent DeLoach that he had conferred with Admiral Souers regarding the apparent stupidity of Mr. William Jackson, new Deputy Director of CIA, and he felt that Admiral Souers would attempt to do something about replacing Jackson as soon as this could be done without raising too much fuss.

The Admiral also commented that he was indeed relieved to know that you fully "knew the score" about the blundering and corruption of OSS and certain elements of CIA.

Reference is made to Bureau letters of July 5, and July 10, 1950, and to your letter of October 3, 1950.

In referenced Bureau letters you were instructed to advise the Bureau in each instance that you furnish pertinent information to the local representative of CIA in Madrid. This rule, of course, also applies to pertinent information you furnish to other branches of the American Embassy. It was also pointed out that information furnished by you to CIA or other branches of the Embassy should be transmitted in memorandum form but that when this was not feasible an appropriate notation should be made in the file or an office memorandum should be prepared setting forth what information was given, where it was given, the date and to whom it was given.

It is noted that your letter of October 3, 1950, is merely a cover letter transmitting copies of memoranda furnished by you to CIA relative to a variety of subjects. Some of this information, although of interest to the Bureau in keeping abreast of general developments in Spain and which is of value from an intelligence standpoint, has not been previously furnished to the Bureau by you. The form in which the material was transmitted with your letter of reference makes it impossible to place this material in the proper files in the Bureau and the material is therefore of little value for future reference at the Seat of Government.

In the future you should be alert to furnish the Bureau for its information the same type of material which you have apparently been furnishing to CIA. That material, however, should be furnished to the Bureau under individual captions and each memorandum should clearly indicate how much of the information contained was furnished to CIA or to any other branch of the Embassy. It is desired in the future you closely adhere to this procedure.

BUREAU NAME CHECKS WITH
ARMY, NAVY, AIR FORCE,
STATE DEPARTMENT AND CIA

Special Agent Edward S. Sanders has advised that when the Bureau requests a name check at OSI Headquarters, the full name, as well as all of the breakdowns thereof, are checked in the file regardless of locality. To date the size of the indices in OSI Headquarters is such as to pose no problem insofar as name checks are concerned.

Special Agent C. W. Bates had advised that the Army maintains two sets of indices for the general files and the intelligence fiels. They will check both indices unless a specific request is made to the contrary, and the name will be broken down completely. They also make available any files concerning the name, or any of the initials in the name, regardless of the locality of the person covered by the file.

Special Agent Ralph R. Roach has advised that name checks are made in the Department of State according to request. In other words, the name is checked as is or broken down as desired by the requesting agency. He advised that there are a limited number of name checks made in the State Department, and therefore, they are handled more or less on an individual basis according to the desires of the agency requesting the name check.

Special Agent C. D. DeLoach has advised that ONI has general indices with centralized filing system. The names are checked primarily as specifically requested, then with the variations of the name. These checks are not restricted to locality, inasmuch as the records section of ONI subversive data.

Reference is made to Bureau memorandum dated October 17, 1950, and particular reference to Section B concerning the change of address of the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency. It is noted in this memorandum that informal matters such as intra-agency memoranda should merely read: Director, Central Intelligence Agency, 2430 E Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

As you know, we have at the present time some 5,000 letters of transmittal used in the transmission of completed applicant investigations. These form letters are addressed to the Director, Central Intelligence Agency, 2210 E Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., Attention: [redacted] I contacted [redacted] CIA, in regard to this change of address and he advised that, as far as the applicant mail was concerned, it would be appreciated if it would be forwarded in the same manner and to the same address as in the past. b3

RECOMMENDATION

In view of the fact that we have a considerable supply of form letters already addressed to 2210 E Street, N. W., and in view of the fact that the representative of CIA handling applicant matters desires that the mail continue to be addressed to 2210 E Street, it is recommended that this information be made available to the Reading Room and that we continue to forward applicant mail to CIA as in the past.
